St.
Prince George.
July 13th 1781.

Sir,

According to Your Majesty's order, yesterday when I came on board Gen. de Bude gave me your letter, which I first read by myself, & afterwards with M^r Mayendie.

Y^e M^{ty} says that for the first fortnight you was well pleased, but that afterwards you was dissatisfied with my leaving the room so often, & I can assure you, Sir, that I never did anything wrong, when I left Y^e M^{ty}. You wish me word that I was imposed upon by bad advice. I was most undoubtedly.

You may depend upon my obeying the ^{order} of M^r M^{ty} implicitly in every respect they can wish, & be particularly careful to the example of others, if the company I intend to keep without their wishing is of me, as Y^e M^{ty} says that I with the best intentions may be corrupted by bad example.

In short in every respect that I can think Y^e M^{ty} will approve I will certainly comply.

I beg my duty to the Queen. I will Y^r M^{ty} assure her that if I stay in England a week longer, I intend to write to her, & give my love & best wishes to my Brothers & Sisters,

Your believe me,

Sir;

Your Majesty's affectionate & Obedient Son,

William
