My Dear Madam,

I have no time in thanking you for your kind & interesting letter with the account which you have given me of your proceedings, since you wrote from Fittleford Bridge, and of your safe arrival at Weymouth which has relieved me from much anxiety. Much as I regret that dear Amelia has suffered so much from the fatigue of her Journey, I had not dared to flatter myself that in her weak state, she would have supported it better, but I trust that after a few days quiet & rest, and when the first agitation of her feelings, which are so natural, has subsided, the Improvement in her health & spirits will reward her for the exertion she has made & afford you every comfort & satisfaction which your affection & attention to her so well merit.

I was well assured that you would be rendered every possible attention from General Gault & am very sensible of the trouble he has taken. I only hope that his indisposition will not be increased by the exertions he has made.

I am with ever
My Dear Madam
Your most affectionate Father
(Signed) George R.
