Mr Fox being detained in the House of Commons last night had not time to read Lord Granville's Revision Gower's Dispatches with sufficient attention to enable him to venture to make any observations on them to your Majesty. Having now read and considered them Mr Fox has to congratulate

Your Majesty on the excellent disposition of reputation they contain of the Parents

Your Majesty of the return to England of Sir James Craig, who writes from Plymouth on the 8th inst. and describes the state of his health, as the cause of his having been compelled to quit his command. There are dispatches from him received at the same time, the last of them dated on the 25th March at Messina, which contain an account of such occurences as had taken place down to that time, the principal of which is the entire dispersion of the army in Calabria under Gen. Damas, and the arrival in Sicily of the Hereditary Prince with only a few followers. The state of things is not described by Sir James Craig as very promising, though he seems to hope, that much of what appears here to be wanting in that disposition

Dropmore May 27. 1806.
10 P.M.

Ld Grenville has the honour humbly to submit for Your Majesty's Royal Signature, if approved, an instrument vacating the appointment of Sir George Barlow as Governor General of Your Majesty's dominions in the East Indies.

The circumstances of the case are as follows. In the first days after Your Majesty had been pleased to form Your Majesty's

1
Majesty's present administration, advice were received of the death of the Marquis Cornwallis. And as it was apprehended that in consequence of this event, (for which no provision had been made,) the public Service might materially suffer from the want of a person invested with sufficient Powers to act in India as occasion might require, it was judged expedient to recommend to the Court of Directors that Sir George Barlow might immediately be appointed Governor General. But when this was done

Ld. Grenville

May 27 1806

done it was at the same time distinctly explained to the Directors that the measure was merely provisional, and was to have effect only until there should be time to consider of a permanent arrangement.

It has accordingly been recently recommended to the Directors that they should make this appointment, with the view of appointing the Earl of Lauderdale. But they have declined to comply with this proposal, partly from objections alledged by some of them against the person recommended, -minded, but more, it is believed, from a desire to retain one of their own servants in that high station - a system of governing India the objections to which are obvious on the slightest consideration, and have repeatedly been demonstrated by experience.

The same Law which vests in the Directors the power of appointing a Governour General, gives to Your Majesty that of vacating all such appointments. And Your Majesty's servants humbly conceive that there can exist few occasions more proper

12218-9

proper for the Exercise of that Power than one where an appointment originally understood to be merely temporary, is adhered to, for the purpose, as it is supposed, of keeping the Government of India in the hands of a Company's Servant. It is hoped that when this Spirit shall have been frustrated there will no longer exist any considerable difficulty as to the appointment of the Earl of Lauderdale, who is unquestionably a person eminently fitted for that station. But whatever may be the appointment to which

The present step may lead Your Majesty's Servants cannot hesitate a moment in humbly submitting to Your Majesty their clear, and decided opinion that the Government ought not, in the present critical circumstances, to be left in the hands of Sir George Barlow, and it is on this ground that Lord Grenville has taken the liberty to lay before Your Majesty the enclosed instrument of revocation, which, if Your Majesty shall be graciously pleased to approve the measure, will afterwards, as

the Act of Parliament requires, be countersigned by the President of the Board of Control.

Lord Grenville begs leave to add that he has carefully read the Papers which Your Majesty has done him the honour of transmitting to him, and that he hopes to be able, (tho' still very lame) to pay His duty to Your Majesty tomorrow, and to receive Your Majesty's commands on the subject to which they relate.

It is now proposed, if it meets Your Majesty's approbation, that the right of prolonging the soldiers service period of not less than two or three years; whereby, it is hoped, that the danger to be apprehended from a sudden discharge of soldiers in time of war, will be so much diminished, as to be no longer an object of uneas-iness. Mr Windham would moreover humbly suggest that in conformity to an opinion seeming to be entertained by your Majesty, the allowance to be given to soldiers after fourteen years service, might in any regulations, which your Majesty should think fit to lay, <sup>down</sup> be changed from six pence to four pence a day, which at the same time that it might contribute to give a general impression of the advantages attached to the condition of a soldier, would not be sufficient to draw from the service men who had in former times a much higher pension than would accrue after seven ~~years~~ further years, making the last for which their service would be required. It will be a subject of inexpressible consolation to
