My most gracious Sovereign

I can't forbear, as I would rather be troublesome than ungrateful, returning my warmest Thanks for the valuable Paper of your Majesty's kind love to me sent by M^r Pulteney.

Before my weeping Eyes left here I was introduc'd to the Ambassadors who unanimously & heartily thank'd me for my best endeavours in restoring your Majesty to your wonted health; Which was the subject evens & greatest Hoping not only to his Family, his People, & all Europe, but even to all the known World:

Then Your Fearful of all Kings! Prone & Bold for the Good of all Mankind!
Forgive me, since of such consequence is your Majesty's health, if I beseech you to give me leave at times to give your Majesty a hint to take especial Care of it, Particularly to endeavour at all times to have if possible six hours sleep; For as your Majesty's mind is engaged so intently on so many subjects in the Day it must soon be worn out unless suffered to refresh itself with proper sleep. Thus much I presume to offer to your Majesty's indulgent heart, concluding You will forgive it as arising from mine however it may be misshapen by the Head of one who has nothing to be proud of but the honour of subscribing himself, my Dear King with the most cordial Wishes Your Majesty's most happy most obliged & most dutiful Subject
