Sir,

I cannot sufficiently express my obligations for the very kind letter that I received this morning from your Royal Highness, which I have taken the liberty to send to D. Attridge that he may be equally sensible of your goodness to us. He however I am allowed to leave town on the day after I received a summons

To attend the second Reading of the Copper Bill, I imagine that such arrangements have taken place as may render the measure palatable to all parties and do away the necessity of giving any further trouble to our friends.

Your Royal Highness mentions that the newspapers have revived the stale and uninteresting subject of Patron's Court the line. I have only seen its publication announced and do not think that a man in his senses would under such circumstances have taken this step. The weather has been so bad that I have not yet been out with the 7th. I flatter myself that we may this summer have the advantage of acting in line with the 10th. I feel confident that we shall decide the greatest benefit from it and from being under your Royal Highness's command.

I have the honor to be

Your Royal Highness's most devoted servant
