Mr. Byerley's compliment to Col. McMahon has the honor of finding him a copy of "The Prince" Col. McMahon will perhaps excuse its being a cut copy on the ground of its being the only one in Mr. Byerley's possession. And if Col.
McMahon will honor him with a perusal of "the introduction" he will readily perceive the humble attachment of Mr. B. to H.R. the Prince Regent blended with the purest zeal for the welfare of his Country.

Mr. Byerley is very grateful to Col. McMahon for the honor afforded him of keeping the Prince's Band & Mr. Byerley begs to inform the Colonel that His Royal Highness pains Condescension and never shown to me more zealous to support the glory of his name every line that subsequently has written papers that endeavor she only aspires to be furnished with an occasion of putting forth his Attachment his humble talents in the Cause of His Royal Highness - If on perusal of the introduction Colonel Mr. Pakenham should feel it proper to lay it before His the Prince of Wales will procure a copy properly bound.
