The more I have considered what your Royal Highness deigned yesterday to suggest, the greater has been the difficulty I have found. I may, indeed, take occasion to explain the falsity of the statement respecting my having gone to bed for the purpose of questioning Lord Sordley's servants; an imputation which might Highly affect your Royal Highness. Be--gird that point I see no means of winning any disapproval which would not be at best inefficacious with regard to your Royal Highness and apparently invidious in the.

With profound respect, I remain
Sir,
Your Royal Highness's
most humble &
most devoted servant
The Prince Regent.
