Paris.

May. 4.

1814.

Sir,

The morning after I had dispatched my last letter to your Royal Highness, I obeyed Her Majesty's commands in waiting upon Her, and I herewith transmit the result of what passed in consequence in the shape of a memorandum which I drew up when expressions were alive in my ear, and for the accuracy of which, I think, I can say, I will be responsible.

I came here for the purpose of acquainting Lord Carteret with all that had passed - as he had written to the King from Troyes in consequence of Count Sippelin's notification, it does not appear that any letter from the King to your Royal Highness is, in point of form necessary; and therefore Count Beroldingen, is now on his way from this place to be presented to you, as the Minister from the Court of Stuttgart.

From all that I have collected of this Gentleman's Character, there cannot exist the smallest objection to him on any score whatever. He is well aware of the temper & ac-by the person he represents, and is very prudently silent upon all topics that regard him.

It was impossible to avoid paying my duty to His Imperial Majesty of Prussia - I had a private audience of considerable duration - nothing can exceed the enthusiasm with which he speaks of his intended visit to you, for so he terms it - he says he is prepared to be hurried two or three times but hopes to be allowed to ride out with your Royal Highness or go any where with you without drawing the observation of the populace - His sister, he told me, had written in the strongest possible terms of the satisfaction she had received by her reception in England she speaks most highly of the Princess Charlotte; and I could easily see the Emperor was delighted with her letter. a hope was expressed that the marriage might take place during his visit. nothing could exceed his personal kindness to his unacknowledged knight of St. Anne.

I find the Duke of C. has left Strelitz about three weeks since, & has taken a tolerable good house at Berlin - I have seen a letter from him from thence of April 19. whether is no mention of any return to England. I am firmly of opinion His Marriage will take place just all doubt.

In my audience with the Prince Hereditaire de Wurtemberg, he spoke of your Royal Highness, in a manner that does him high honour - He also says, His visit to England is to you - He means to live very private - His Talents as a Soldier are spoken of here by the French Marshals as of first rate, and I think from the Information I have received, nothing could prevent a popular

Commotus in his own Country, but a persuader that his own Principles were in direct opposition to those that are now there in force.
 His Department is every way most unassuming, but has much of what is here termed the "Air noble"

I have been collecting here every thing I could find appertaining to the Family of the Exiled Monarch.
 I have also several other articles which I do not think expedient to permit to be rummaged by lower Gentlemen, I therefore return via Boulogne which may make it a day or two later, than if I came by Calais, before I can say, I

Am,

Ever your Royal Highness affectionate Servant,

Thos: Capel Vert.

I cannot resist enclosing your Royal Highness a list of the Company at Mr. Charles Stewart's most magnificent Ball of last night.
