My Dear Friend.

I have ^{an} answer from Leach, which as it speaks but for itself I send to You -

I think there is a great deal of very sound judicious observation in the part which relates to His Economy in Part - and as the Prince sh^d never have anybody in high Situation about him whose public conduct can be made the Subject of Reflection, & whose own Mind is not fully satisfied as to his Station - That Leach's bias of retiring from the House of Commons is that which His Royal Highness under

Reflection

reflection will think most wise —

Perhaps the best proposal they would be to have an unexceptionable person highly qualified for the Station in Parliament free and unlogged by any opinions or line of Conduct —

But I am sure of this that as such a person is not to be had the best they is to have such whose stands superior to all others at the English Bar in qualification for the office — and that Leach out of Parl^t is better than any other person ⁱⁿ it.

If You think ~~it~~ ^{it} can be at all surpris'd that Mr Paine should know my opinion. His letter will make you so state it.

Ever my Dear friend's
