On coming home this instant, I have found Lord North's box containing a letter that is certainly filled with the sentiments of Affection to my person, though in other respects not very agreeable to my wishes. He cannot be surpris'd that engaged in many difficulties, and an Opposition to Government form'd of Men that if they could succeed would restrain no one of the absurd ideas they have sported, I think it the duty nay personal honour of those in public Stations must prompt them with zeal to make every effort to assist me, who have unreservedly supported them.
