

John Robinson

Mr Robinson hopes that he will not transgress too much on your Majesty's Goodness by presuming to acquaint your Majesty, that the Attorney General on Friday Evening at the House of Commons expressed himself to Mr Robinson as highly honoured by the most gracious reception which your Majesty had been pleased to give him, and as most feelingly sensible of your Majesty's great Goodness and condescending Conversation — His temper of Mind was, almost in every thing, as could be wished, for carrying on your Majesty's Government with Vigour, and and Effect, and it appears that he continues so, by the Letter to Mr. Robinson, which he transmits herein for Your Majesty's perusal, thinking that it may not be disagreeable to Your Majesty to see the Operation of your Majesty's Conversation with him. —
