

Charles Jenkinson.

3565

I presume to trouble your Majesty with the enclosed Papers for your Royal signature as they are very numerous & I imagine it will be less inconvenient for your Majesty than to bring them to you in your Closet.

Your Majesty last night was wiser more than I expected, & I know that the spirits of Opposition are very much depressed thereby. They had the presumption to oppose; There had been a Contest between Mr C. Fox & Mr Tho. Townshend who should be Paymaster, at last Mr Fox gave way & instead thereof he was to be Chancellor of the Exchequer. I heard also this from more than one quarter & part: wishes

caused by from Mr Caswell the Deputy Paymaster, which amounts fully for the Charge of Subinut in His Principal.

Nothing could be more Ashile, than the Conduct, which Admiral Buppel & Lord How held yesterday; I am convinced They must be consider'd as Enemies. Mr D'By-ly & Mr Sheachy, who are to be consider'd as Lord How's Friends, were both present some part of the day, but neither voted.

Mr James Douglas differ'd from His Friends & did not vote; Mr Johnson went away.

Lord North spoke exceedingly well; Lord Melbourn spoke better than the day before; but there still wanted more to better Defense on the part of the Admirals.

The Country Gentlemen behaved very handsomely & Mr Winer made a short speech which

Charl

which

of Mr were

of Mr budd

prova
the St

this merit

by, as

Maj

20.9

Charles Jenkinson.

3565 (2)

which was of great use.

Both the Brothers of the Duke of Marlborough went away & yet they were both at the House today.

Lord Rockingham, the Duke of Rutland & the Duke of Manchester attended as usual.

I wish Lord North would be prevail'd on to be particularly civil to the Independent Gentlemen, who came on this occasion from a great Distance.

I thought I might presume to mention these Circumstances to your Majesty, as it was necessary for me to send your Majesty a Box.

20. m. past 9.

From your Majesty's Dutiful Subject
C. Jenkinson

[Faint, illegible handwritten text, likely bleed-through from the reverse side of the page.]