Another Year is past, & I will not let this begin without wishing You every thing that Providence determines for Your Comfort & happiness. I might make use of many Words, but I could never find any more Expressive of my real Sentiments than You which You know must after all ^{be} ^{determined} determined by the Direction of the Almighty. & as We do look back upon a wretched Year which is Past, I trust that the one which is begun will prove a happier to Us all, above all I beseech You let no Offence ever Prove You to any rash Action, but overcome it with Patience, as much more likely to make others weary of Persecuting You, & to insure You the Blessing of having acted right. These Sentiments are dictated from the Heart of My dearest Son.
