My Dearest Son. I am quite ashamed of having forgot to give You a Petition of the Hanoverian Painter Zheberg whose Situation seems to be very deplorable & stated with Truth in the Inclosed Paper, the far as I could go I have assisted him in various ways, but now as His Health begins to Suffer & He is threatened with Imprisonment I beg leave to advise that if You will either Grant His request by giving Him Money or a Title You will be kind enough to do it with the Proviso that He leaves England directly else He will be continually plaguing Us.

To this I must add another request!

about a Tradesman at Brighton who has applied for Leave to put up my Arms His name is Dyploer & if You have no Objection to it & He is a Man of good Character You will allow General Bloomfield to Inform him of my granting His request.

Your kind Letter to Mary arrived after Breakfast Yesterday we read it in Famille & am truly sensible of all Your kind & affectionate expressions ~~for~~ about Us, I do assure You Our feelings were pretty near the same as Yours when we left You, but I console myself with the Idea, that such a meeting may take place
