Tuesday 24th. Mr. Addison. A cold & cough

Wednesday 25th. Dr. Gibberne was in the room at three different consultations but rather in a distance. They all agreed that the King's pulse had never been above 96 but generally under 90.

Thursday 26th

Friday 27th. Dr. John Willis assured me that he not only thought that the King could not understand what he read were he disposed to read, but that he would not do the best of his judgment (Dr. J. Willis) know a single letter

Saturday 28th

Dr. Gibberne & Dr. J. Willis (the Clergyman) no great alteration except the King's pulse being at 88 instead of 94 & 96, there he was much irritated from one of the pills considerably after dinner went again in the evening found Dr. Gibberne & Gibberne & the three Willis. Dr. Gibberne said the King's pulse was again at 94 or 96, & certainly was more irritated than in the morning, saying it was a tribute due to the fact that the King had taken in the course of the day & so the draught with 1/2 gr of of Calomel the King had taken of which he had operated but did was in general much the same.
