Edinburgh, April 17th

My dear friend

All the Scotch Members are going up to join Pitt in a thundering blow against Addington. It is an interesting judgment, to add every weight to the attack: for, I can say to you I am satisfied that Pitt's line would be quite different from any which he has hitherto pursued. At all events, nothing can be more injurious to the Prince's interests than Doing this conduct. If this sentiment be adopted do you speak in my name to Chapman, Ham, & others whom they will indicate, & make Mr John Sinclair write to Lovden, as well as they to the friends who are in town.

Faithfully yours
Paine
