Brighton Nov. 23 1802

Sir

Lord Mordaunt will have informed your Royal Highness of the Interview I had with my friend, which however afforded nothing so material as to make me think I might ask your permission to return to my Family. His decided opinion, arising from a private conversation with H. M., is, that it is the King's Intention gradually to show more kindness to your R. H. and he states him to have been much satisfied with all that passed during your stay at Windsor. My friend was very happy to hear of your intention to renew the visit the beginning of next week, and your R. H. may then perhaps be induced to honor him with another conference.

With respect to myself, I have to beg your Royal Highness will receive my humble thanks for the goodness with which you were pleased to give your sanction to my acceptance of the Irish Secretaryship, but as I have no reason to believe that such an arrangement could be made in the manner which alone would render the situation agreeable to my own feelings, I consider the appointment as out of the question. I could not however forbear from taking this opportunity of renewing to your Royal Highness my gratitude for The favor, & Protection you have extended towards one whom I could hope it is to be able to prove himself, with all sincerity,

Sir

Your Royal Highnesses

devoted & faithful

servant
