I trouble your Majesty with the intended answer to Mr. Simolin which I propose to deliver to them on Monday if they meet with your Majesty's approbation.
It is evident that Count Narin seems to perceive an angry answer, which seems to be a reason for making the papers to be delivered as civil as possible. The last letters from Mr. Keith seem to give a hope of such a connection between the two Imperial Courts as must in its consequences disappoint of Narin's wishes and defeat all the Intrigues of the Prussian cabinet.
