London, Nov 10th

Si

I have been honored with your Royal Highness's most kind letter.
I know well to believe that you will satisfy yourself for the present. By having read the Prince's Defence has enabled me to speak with such more effect; & I am persuaded all will take a right course. There is nothing the defence but declamatory insinuations against the conspirators & he. Some of the material allegations are disproved by the affidavits of Mundy & Lawrence certainly cannot have any real weight.

And she protests against any further saying in a manner which has the best outward appearance for her. The whole plea rests on the assumption that Cole & his good are conspirators with the Duplases, a charge entirely unsupported.

Celi ha-ha-ha has explained to me your Royal Highness's wishes for Bleau-field. If there be not objections wholly insuperable, of which I am not at present aware, your desires shall be most joyfully obeyed. I have not to desire to be general healed to come to as on the subject.

With unalterable devotion, I remain Sir,
Your loyal & obedient servant,
Perica

The Prince of Wales.
