The Prince of Wales ^{has received} ~~returning~~ ^{in his} ~~letter~~ ~~last night found~~ a letter from the Chancellor enclosing a Paper which he undertakes to come from the King containing the ~~contents~~ ^{of the Paper} of a Plan for the future care ^{his Daughter} (Education) of the Princess Charlotte. As this subject is a matter of no small importance either to the Prince or the Country, it will be necessary for the Prince to take some time, before he can state ~~any thing~~ to the Chancellor any sort of opinion upon the subject. But ^{it} is with no inconsiderable degree of surprise that the Prince observes in the very commencement of the Paper which the L^o Ch^o has transmitted to him, a reference

A communication through the Earl of Mornay which ~~was~~ only relate to the letter which his Lordship wrote the Chancellor (His Majesty never having yet been pleased to see it) ^{and upon the subject of the same} the contents of which, the Prince had not without reason flattered himself, had been sufficiently explained to the J. H. by the Prince himself in the last interview he had with his Lordship at (last time) but one.
 The day preceding to His Majesty's leaving Windsor for Braymouth; & by the Earl of Mornay who immediately before the last time he left London to resume his command in Scotland, as well as, ^{and lately indeed} but a few days ago in the ^{very} last interview he had with the J. H. in which interview, ^{the Duke of Mornay} he assured the Prince he had put the Chancellor most fully in possession of the Prince's ^{feelings} sentiments & intention

The Prince likewise knows from the Earl of Mordaunt that he has completely informed Mr. Pitt of the whole of his ^{the Prince's} dispositions & resolutions upon the subject. The Prince therefore returns the enclosed Paper to the Chancellor, & desires that both he & Mr. Pitt will, ^{at the same time} explain to His Majesty what the Earl of Mordaunt has communicated to them upon this ^{head} subject. And, ^{in order to prevent} to avoid further any misunderstanding or misconstruction the Prince desires, that all communications between the Chancellor & the Prince may pass through the Earl of Mordaunt.
