April 29. 1807.

My dear Tammy, will I hope do me the justice to believe, that I look forward with great delight to the prospect of seeing her. If I had no other motive this alone would make me rejoice at your having lost your cold: but if you love me pray, pray, get no more of them. I know, to my cost, what troublesome companions they are, having as bad a one as needs be. But I hope it will be quite well by Sunday when we depend on seeing you. Mind, you must not come before a quarter before eight, or I shall not be returned from my airing: but as you love me be not later.

Lady de Clifford, M^{rs} Dmy & M^r Nott beg their kind Comps.

Believe me to be, my Dear Tammy

Yours ever Affec^{te}

(signed) Charlotte.

Many thanks to you my dear Sammy, for your kindness in sending me that letter, which I value highly, and which I keep safely locked up: at the same time I fear you must have thought me very remiss in not having thanked you sooner. But I know your goodness, and am confident you will not impute the neglect to diminution of regard. - No, no, my dear Sammy my head may be in fault twenty times a day: not so I hope ever my heart.

The purse you gave me, I am happy to say brought me good luck. When last I was at the Queen's House it was the universal admiration.

M^r. Nott is just come.

Adieu: I can add no more but that I have begun my day well at least, by writing to my dear Sammy. La' en dites vous?

I am, my dear Sammy

Your ever affectionate

Good God, my dear M^{rs} Campbell; I am sure Papa, would let you stay for five, or six months in the country, and then let you come back. Consider what I lose by your going back; but to leave me is ——— I cannot go on. Think of me! I am your ever affectionate child
C.

Write to me long letters, and grave ones; and give me advice; so that, as I am deprived seeing you let me have the comfort of your advice. Pray do, and I will write to you.

O. O. think of me! I lose more than I can tell you But I give up my feelings to your health. Thank God I have Mr Nott whom I have a sincere regard for; and he will write to you. But I trust entirely to my kind, and good Father who will do every thing for my good. God bless you, and may you enjoy your health. I am your ever affectionate and attached pupil
C.

Stay with me as long as you can with convenience to yourself.
