Though soon I am to have the pleasure of seeing you, my dear M^r. Nott, yet I cannot help troubling you with a few lines to say how very much concerned I am, at my last behaviour both to yourself and the Bishop; that I am willing to make any reparation in my power, to his Lordship for my past conduct. For yourself, allow me to make my apologies in person when you come again. Believe me nothing has hurt me more than the idea of being sunk in your good opinions. Could I bring back yesterday I would. I will labour to correct myself, and never fail to remember Monday. Being in your good opinion I cannot expect to be for some time; but I hope, in the mean time you will believe me to be truly your ever Affec^{te}
