

Let me, I beseech you, never see these again: for when you quit me, it will only put me in mind of what did pass, which I wish to forget. Take every thing away from me, that you have had the goodness to give me; nay even the letters which I value above everything. But I entreat you will always remember that I have always had a regard towards you; that I would have done anything you could have desired; and even now, if it is not too late. But I do not repine as I think you will be happy. I shall not think of my own misfortunes, believe me, as you will be happy.

I am your ever truly

Aff.
(signed) Charlotte

and that if I am desired to do any thing, I shall go to my room, and think, when you were about me whether, I knew you would have desired me to do so; if not it should not be done.

