I have received Lord Sydney's note enclosing the List of Speakers yesterday in the House of Lords on the Committing the East India Bill as well as the list of Peers present on the Occasion. I should hope that the discussion has been so full that little more trouble will be given in the Committee on Wednesday; the only thing that appears singular is that Lord Fitzwilliam who took so forward a part in the late Obnoxious Bill; has not appeared at least to add his weight to the feeble Opposition shewn on the present Occasion

Mr Pitt humbly presumes to acquaint your Majesty, that on Mr Thornton's moving to day to refer the Petition of the Navy Bill holders to the Committee of ways and means, Mr Pitt stated the Arguments in support of the Plan which had been proposed, and at the same Time the Reasons for being now willing to waive the difference of Account. A Conversation took place in consequence, in which Mr Fox and Lord North attacked the Principles of the former Proposal, at considerable Length, and were answered by Lord Mahon and Mr Prou. The amended Resolutions were agreed to without a Division; and the Bill for the new Duty on Tea, and on

I am sensible of Mr. Pitt's Attention in transmitting the letter he has received from Mr. Orde, which undoubtedly must be more explicit than any Official one which may have accompanied it to the Secretary of State. I hope the Zeal of the servants of the Crown in Ireland will not overbalance their prudence, for should they find no immediate mischief is likely to arise from not seizing on the Conspirators, the letting them continue to assemble, having exact intelligence of what passes at their meetings, will be a means of being informed of all those concerned, and consequently when it is thought necessary to bring this Plot to light, the whole Scheme may be overtraced, whilst if published too soon, only the parties in Dublin will probably come to light, and though it may stop the evil for some time, it will in some time again break out. Indeed I look upon a discovery previous to the Session of Parliament in Ireland and the less time before it, as a most happy circumstance, it will take off the minds of Persons from delicate Subjects that can only involve that Kingdom into insurmountable difficulties.

Lord Howe has the honor to transmit for your Majesty's information a Letter from Rear Admiral Sir Richard Hughes; the only Letter received by the Packet.

Also the Letters received from Vice Admiral Gimbeer, respecting his late proceedings at Jamaica; and on the subject of the objections made by the Board to the purchase of the Armed Vessels he had added to the Squadron; and of his return to England in the Europa.

In answer to his application some Months since for permission to leave the conduct of the Squadron in charge of the senior Captain, in case his then ill state of health should require it, a discretionary power was sent abroad to him for that purpose. And as his continuance in Commission seems no longer necessary, Lord Howe most humbly submits for your Majesty's Approbation, that he may be now reduced & ordered to strike his Flag accordingly,

Lord Howe has the honor to transmit for your Majesty's information, the several Dispatches received from Commodore Sir James Douglas by your Majesty's Schoon the Observer, relative to the Incidents occurring upon the Patriots since his arrival at Halifax.

The Commodore's first Letter of the 26th of July, respects chiefly, the Situation of the American Loyalists settled in different parts of Nova Scotia; with regard to the Supplies of Provision they will have occasion for, before the commencement of the ensuing Winter.

His second Letter dated the 31st of July, communicates the the Appointments of the Ships & Vessels under his Orders, upon various Services, until the middle of the next Month. Amongst these circumstances, the conflagration by which the greater part of the Dwelling-Houses & Stores of the Settlers at Port Antonio have been destroyed, as recited in his Order to the Captain of the Observer dated the 6th of the same Month, seems of the greater Moment. The Commodore signifies in the same Letter, the Steps he had taken for their more immediate Relief.

His third Letter of the 1st Instant solely relates to his dissatisfaction with the Naval Storekeeper at Halifax, and the grounds upon which he has been induced to put that Officer under suspension: But with scornishment for the

The Commodore gives in his fourth letter of the next days date, his more particular reasons for sending the Observer away immediately to England with his Dispatches. On account of an application made by the Commander of a French Frigate arriv'd on flutz, for leave to take or landing of coals from Spanish River; and of some intentions of the same nature understood of several American Ships not authorized for that purpose. With this last letter he has enclosed the orders he had given to the Captain of the Hermione through

Mr. Pitt has judged very properly in communicating the private letter he has received from Mr. Orde. I agree with the opinion that the Informers greatly exaggerate, but that would not authorize any relaxation of attention to so very serious a subject; the opinions that have been sent from hence concur in recommending the postponing any publication; therefore I need not say more on that head which certainly is the only judicious conduct that can be pursued. The publications are undoubtedly the most barefaced Treason, which it would be difficult for the most Patriotic Man to deny; but the taking any step on them I think ought also to be postponed.
