Lord Chatham, I am sorry You continue giving so unfavourable an Account of Your health, I therefore take up my pen most earnestly to recommend Your sending for Sir Clifton Winttingham, whose great perspicuity I have experienced & I make no doubt You will very shortly find the good effects of his coming to Dr. Addington's assistance. ^{I know what the} whom you very high opinion Sir Edward will not say of Sir Clifton, ^{whom you} ~~will be a great help to you~~ ^{will be a great help to you} andoubtedly have no small weight with you. ~~and must make him glad to see you~~ ^{finds you take this resolution}; I have long wished ^{give you this} to advise ~~that~~ but now think I owe it to the good of my Service and ever to the Public not to withhold it any longer

Lord Chatham most humbly begs leave to lay himself with all duty and submission at the King's feet, utterly unable to express what he feels from the most condescending marks of His Majesty's infinite goodness in deigning to bestow a thought upon the Health of a devoted Servant. Ink as that Health still remains, may He be permitted most humbly to submit to His Majesty, that his entire confidence is placed in Doctor Addington, who gives him the strongest assurances of recovery, with proper time.
As He relies on these assurances, He ventures most humbly to implore that He may be allowed still to pursue the same Directions, without the Intercession of another Physician. It is with the deepest Sense of the Grace and Favour extended to Him by the most gracious of Royal Masters that He prostrates Himself before His Majesty's Goodness, with some hope of pardon, for presuming to lay such humbly at His Majesty's Feet such a Petition.
