Downing Street March 1. 1796.

Lord Grenville has the honour humbly to acquaint Your Majesty that the Count de Zeppelin is arrived in England with letters to Your Majesty from the Duke of Wurtemberg and the Hereditary Prince. When Lord Grenville first saw M. de Zeppelin he opened to Lord Grenville no other business than that that of a negotiation about the Wurtemberg troops at the Cape which the Duke was desirous of offering for Your Majesty's service there; an offer which Mr. Dundas seems to think it would not be advantageous for Your Majesty to accept.

Yesterday Lord Grenville received a note from Count Zeppelin saying that he had only opened to him a part of his Commission, and desiring to see him again to execute the other orders which he had received. Lord Grenville having accordingly seen him again this morning Count Zeppelin put into his hands the copies of letters from the Duke and Duke of Wurtemberg and from the Hereditary Prince which Lord Grenville has now the honour to transmit to Your Majesty.

After this Count Zeppelin read to Lord Grenville a letter addressed by Count Zeppelin to some other person on the subject of what had passed respecting the Prince's former marriage, and tending to exculpate the Prince's conduct in that respect. This letter together with some other papers of the same tendency he requested Lord Grenville to lay before Your Majesty.

Lord Grenville judged that the only fit line for him to pursue on this occasion was to take the papers apuring Count Zeppelin that the whole should be laid before Your Majesty to whose decision Lord Grenville had only to refer himself without expressing any opinion or intimating any upon the subject. He only thought it right to mention it to Count Zeppelin as his opinion that as the subject was not entirely new to Your Majesty it would be both more respectful to Your Majesty and in all respects better for the Aged Prince himself that the demand of a formal audience to deliver the letters should not be pressed until Your Majesty had considered the paper which Count Zeppelin was charged to submit, and which he had delivered to Lord Grenville.

Count Zeppelin agreed in the propriety of this, but said that if Your Majesty should not be disposed to give a favourable answer in the first instance His Master was desirous of obtaining Your Majesty's permission to make a journey to England in the hope of removing any unfavourable impressions which Your Majesty might have respecting him.

March 5. 1796

Earl Spencer has the Honour to inform your Majesty that an account is just received by the Telegraph, that Admiral Duncan had sailed this morning from the Downs at seven o'clock with the Squadron under his Command consisting of the Porcupine, Ruffel, Brunswick, Robust & Resolutes, accompanied by the Philip, Russian Line of Battle Ship, & the Proserpine Frigate. The Wind being very scant the Robert, Ramillies and Philip came to anchor in the Downs again soon after getting under way & the Admiral with the other Ships anchored off the N<sup>o</sup> Foreland to wait for them. A French Espion in this moment came up saying that those three Ships are now again getting under way with the Wind at South East; and I am hence satisfied that they will be enabled to get to Sea.

Your Majesty's goodness to me is such that I cannot refrain from taking the liberty of laying myself at your feet to express my humble thanks and

The Duke of Portland bys leave to lay before Your Majesty two Orders which he received to day, from The Lord Lieutenant of Ireland respecting the Irish Brigade, & with all humility to submit to Your Majesty the expediency of adhering to the Rule Your Majesty commanded the Duke of Portland to lay down for the choice the Lord Lieutenant was to make of the Regiments to be ordered for immediate service by which that to which Your Majesty has been pleased to appoint the present Irish Small Detachment will be one of the two first to be sent, <sup>according</sup> to its original destination

The Duke of Portland also presents to your Majesty a Letter from the Lord Advocate in which a better account is given of the quantity of Corn supposed to be actually in Scotland than has yet been received from that part of the Kingdom, from whence it may be hoped that ~~the~~ pretence for disturbances similar to those which the Letter states to have been quelled at Inverness will not long exist <sup>more</sup> in the minds of those whose fears or malice may render them the most alive to apprehensions of security. The

Sir

I had determin'd never again to trouble your Majesty on my own account, but as it is natural when oppress'd to seek for redress I find myself once more applying to You Sir for Protection against Enemies too powerful for me to withstand. Under your protection Sir I have receiv'd the greatest relief from all my mortifications and had nearly forgotten them, but shall ever with gratitude remember your goodness to me. I now find fresh mortifications coming from a quarter I did not expect, I had wait'd in hopes of receiving some consolation by a letter from Lord Spencer, if it had been merely to say he was sorry he could not protect me, it wou'd have afforded me some satisfaction, and I might still have look'd forward without troubling your Majesty, which is now become necessary. To preserve your good opinion Sir is one of the first objects of my life, I therefore beg leave to lay before you a letter I wrote to Lord Spencer on the 18th, to which I receiv'd a cold answer pre-ious to the disposal of the Governorship of My Lord I owe it to myself that Y<sup>r</sup> Lordship should be thoroughly impress'd with my situation, In reflecting this I think I shall give Y<sup>r</sup> Lordship much less trouble by writing, and be able to express myself more clearly than by drawing an audience. When I had the honor of waiting on you last I did not apprehend that I was so near a similar mortification to that I had before felt. I knew there was a Senior Flag Officer and I knew there was a meritorious Off<sup>r</sup> who had been wounded, also wounded, to have solicited for one of the few Emoluments which were held out for the encouragement of Off<sup>rs</sup> when they arrive near the top of the service. In desiring them, is not what I wish'd to do. I only wish'd to guard ag<sup>t</sup> another solicitation, not to call it by a more disagreeable name, but call it by whatever name, it must affect my character w<sup>ch</sup> had before suffer'd. I ought not to have solicited or I probably should not have seen His M<sup>ty</sup> gracious compliance with my request to give me a Mark of M<sup>ty</sup> favor, w<sup>ch</sup> certainly had the effect of softning my mortifications, but I cannot suppose His M<sup>ty</sup> meant to preclude my looking forward to those things w<sup>ch</sup> every Off<sup>r</sup> looks to, and w<sup>ch</sup> I have in some measure look'd to for above 30 years out for more than 16 with a degree of expectation, having at that time been honor'd with a great charge w<sup>ch</sup> engag'd me to the service.
