My dearest Brother

The baby has passed a furious battle during the day through very nervous at times in both crying & laughing, but in the course of the day has had a great deal of sleep & has been a deep voice of all.

This evening -

My dear Brother
The King has passed a very busy sort of day but without exertion & yet nothing that could be called relaxed but not always in good humour with his ever generous company The Queen is delighted with a letter she received this morning from Ernest dated the 26 & was told on the the 1st of March by your a most comfortable interesting account of all the family & appears delighted with them all - but I must leave my pen to rest because I must not leave from any part since we left home - which really is quite wonderful -

God bless you & yours

My dear Brother
This day began very ill but some sweet tea has had the desired effect & about seven my much after dinner he has had three hours sleep this evening but is now awake and does not appear as if he would sleep again in a hurry as he is saying

Yours

My dear Brother though the King slept six hours in the night last night yet he awoke ill this morning & was carried into the next room. He remained perfectly quiet after until dinner time when he refused his dinner & then again was calm till they proposed to him going to bed at first he made no objection, but got warm and involved in the subject so he was carried & he awoke about seven after 9 o'clock - It can hardly be called a bad day however having these fine storms the R. has

You will be surprised to hear on being here at the Opera this day the weather beautiful and the whole thing must give you your stomach which the Queen took full possession of & enjoyed it as much as any body - This drive to Ascot was quite an edification of the Queen for on some of us could believe our eyes when she said last night she had a great pleasure to go -
