My dear Mrs Adams -

Many thanks for your last kind letter I hope as you don't know your health that you are quite well & do get into your garden as much as you can - The system of quiet continues but it certainly does not have of the smallest use to the mind as the King never was in a more lost state in his life any part of this sleep than he has been for the last week - And as it is not deplorable to move him out of these pernicious of course all the errors are so deeply rooted that I look upon it as next to impossible his recovery - By way of preventing all imitation he is allowed to do just what he pleases His appetite is excellent & he is able to eat all day long & whenever he pleases which all the day was an & troublesome discovery of, but for all that the Miller don't like to stop this eating without an & excuse & reason morning of his chair you may suppose he grows large & his legs begin to swell which is terrible — but but much he has been growing into a fuldole state, but he stranges is that it is most to impossible what may not happen — as to in re lives we can do nothing but keep quiet till the grant is made & I am told the opponents are determined to bring the subject of the Prin cess forward & that that is the cause of keeping our business off as the idea is that is the ground & they will take to know it is — Party runs as high as this moment it is dreadful the poor Prince seems to be difficulties & is moved to death but I still hope as he is very decided & steady that all may still be very well with a little care & prudence. The summons for the Kings Private Property was signed to act & without all is going on quietly — the Prince is only anxious to consider the Kings private feelings as much as possible & every day gives us some new proof of this — I have good accounts of gentle & is not yet writ to my own affair yet — I hope you have good accounts of Holleson & all Mrs Fuller - She had a letter from Augusta (perhaps yesterday) giving a good account of herself & notes in letters & more comfortable objects she does not talk of coming toward
