

Princess Elizabeth

Dec 14 1810

I was very much vexed the post went out without a line from me yesterday it was not my fault as I was really soured to death all day. I have now the pleasure of perusing dear Mary's pencil is increased & tho she had such a last night, which she did not find so much benefit from as she had hoped, she is certainly better to day yet Sir A Stalford, has found it necessary to steady the nervous map on the head by a plaster which is put on on the back part of her head when the great trembling of the nerves in the skull between four & five hours, & is to keep very quiet undisturbed which is highly company — She desires her kind love to you & always she will do what I have desired — The dear Henry has had seven hours natural sleep, which is a very happy thing, tho you may believe we are in a thousand fights & fears, yet we feel all is in the hand of God, & we must submit to whatever is his will.

I sincerely hope your recovery is better remember me to Aunt your Daughter & Beloved

Dumblenish

1710

John Galt