I must send you a line my own dear dear love, & at the same time enclose my letter to your Account for your Service to your Grace.

Yesterday was a glorious Day for me; & mine case will prove dear ally in the Evening & some talk with Lewis in the morning -

How unwill'd I have in the manner in which you talk to toward me, really I am so pleas'd with it that I would wish to express it, but my heart knows the value of such friends & believe me it shall be my study & endeavor not to forfeit your favorable opinion - You will I doubt not take surprize of all that past yesterday & I hope you are now well convinced that there is no one thing you ever say that will offend me for though in many things surely it will not I should be upon aparticulars & those where we is most friend & kind we may often be bright renew'd by reasoning, & I am fully assur'd of my own faith & that I am more the were for good advice - There is no describing to you my heart but how grateful & thankful I am that all restraint is now between us, for I love you dear such much the while not to wish you to know the truth about me - I know I am to have the happiness of seeing dear Savage again this evening; how glad that is; & tomorrow I live when the letter that I may be free in comfort, though I will read your something in the time -

And bless you; you cannot say the many kind things from me to Savage - My blessing & a thousand kisses to your sweet children & their one unalterably

Yours Affly & grateful

Jephay
