

More kind than a post home yet I cannot stop until I have written you a line very best beloved friend.
I always feel I owe you four more than I can say, but you are hindered if possible may have; your done not even like yourself, but I am wound for me in Paris; my own done here how I wish you were in your bed though told after tomorrow it is against my interest however you should not consent & I have got a quiet room to see you in & should desire you may be shown there, for it is quite a wonder to see the idea of your coming up - like the Countess has said to us in that he had a truff with W.B.

but that he had been very kind & then were his words "I am 66 and by this time must know what I like; I was not offended with you for naming your friend, but I was determined upon mine - the L. said he had heard of you that I not change mine - the C. is here certainly from what you tell me softened the manner with the L.
: wrap, perhaps that is a matter that Rowland says he is divided for by Dr. Clifford - I thought him surely ends this evening, but what a night for him to travel in & he is just above, comes early towards & then goes to the C. returns to show where Dr. Thomas wants him - I long to see & hear from being to

was in the midst
with some very
him
was -
I fear
that know
about
is Just
H. [unclear]

from I judge; how how but I shall leave some there now & return to all being my conscience, he was never abundant if he set in the ring it is all the better aided in our souls he has for nothing in our hearts we never then the fear of doing any thing that might offend him after his kindness, thank you - God might my sweet love I pray God if I do not see you that I may have the comfort of hearing for our dying souls; this about in Heaven my heart throbs now more than ever - I own but so in I want to speak to you I trust myself -
Your ever Affectionate
Wednesday night - John

Less without and the same Swagge & tells him that as he can not sit the Blay I did not care to look for him in person & know nothing of the matter —
