

When in Town one must be all the laffy which accounts for my writing in this style on a distinct piece of paper, but I feel afraid that whatever it is the laffy or out my sweet love will accept it happily remembering that these few lines come from a most grateful little heart & from one who has for Savage dead, it did me a favour of just giving a glimpse of you both at the Blaze. May I have visited myself with you, what a contrast it would have been, & what a laffy difference.
The Dogs of Gore they used to tell me "I heard me in a pair as you & in a pair, it just arrived as you & in a pair, it may be just thing & true, but what is just is not always pleasant & so I found it in the evening. I have above mentioned, husband I am & have uncomfortable. I sighed & looked at you & wished myself in your bar, then I thought of St. George's Chateau, & felt a haunting of the Apprentice & settling between you both dear Jack, would I do love you I would & hope you ever will have one time will show or Savage says if I shall be chargeable like some father, but I hope that time will soon come, & I am sure if I have myself — I have for another one written, I am sure of one, though I am at this moment writing with candles of wax, id not yet see a Clerk, a few who have been sent this day is not so small for the visit in my & dear Savage, second having one in bed? — — both my dear I am completely well, the dear Angel from the black death & probably will not be longer this week, but like it was best might be end not have been here till me, all this evening, one to death — I thought him much hurried when he came in to our dinner, very few humors but in a sad fit, after dinner he told of nothing but of these sad things, but not one word of any other kind — I don't say I don't think that this blessed Angel shines in his conduct & judgement — as to me, I am in a more depressed eye more more more — God! how little feeling if any does the share of the Reds: widerly of her side; the Red lady is in high spirits, I suppose of the Queen Woman's scheme, some unaccountable, these ideas!

- This morning she had some conversation with Queen & Phillipa to her comfort her business by saying that all all all all views I be it aside to ease the Royal mind, to what in common was made best of. say Queen, it is nothing to me I am sure I have nothing, it is all my sad - & then she skipped in her way to Bridge Edge of that sort, and said "both Sofia how partly very diamonds are, as for Sofia she will all her fortune at the Death

There now here where shall I see you again, & how can I ever tell you how much I feel your kindness, mercy some not humble & a total savage, but I'd be a void of feeling or some possible if my heart did not lead me to love you - & I only hope I may ever express as I ought the friendship of such a friend
- As to myself I am tired, but I cannot in want of my daily cordial, viz a ride with Savage, & a visit from you — (and God bless you) — we cannot have alone, so we are to have a party a thousand thousand Affection loves to both Savage & accept the same from your ever devoted attached &

Affection
