

Tuesday December 20th 1804

My very dear dear here, I have been waiting with the int. most impatience for a line from you; judge then what I must have felt this morning upon receiving a line, in my dear a letter. Before I enter upon my insignificant self I must give you some few details of the dear blessed St. who has been delightfully well at this week. This morning however I did not quite like him a much as in the foregoing day, but I lay it chiefly to the being rather opi-dated with the thought of seeing the Chamberlain & Mr Pitt who are to be here by ten o'clock. The result of which audience I will report at the end of their letter to night by which time I may probably have something of it. I am I cannot feel sanguine about it as the dear dear however in supporting & going to the Prince; in which you have a partner & I have that the P. particularly will not give away until the P. promises not to hold her off as he does - I do think your account of Swope is wonderful; in; never did I hear any thing that came up to it; My God! what was the P. more, & does he really fancy that because he is the rising sun any thing he says is to be swallowed, just & says I wonder not that dear Swope was, was, was, see see heart of the sacred to be than that in - The P.'s manner is certainly life and, but this morning I trembled as she was not pleased at the dear Angel's & seeing her to go over the Castle with him; she said she was not an enthusiast; how true that is; God knows how enthusiastic consists in nothing but eating black pudding & German dishes at Veprance - I must for insistence
 - My dear dear here and I must now close my note, & take into consideration the letter part of your very dear letter when you so kindly inform me that the contents of mine did not cause you displeasure - God bless you & our republic & substitution of anger, you believe me when say I am that that is unprofitable, would see often that I am in the nature for the heart of that I feel more friendly than me in this manner for I have professed, a certain way letter & I hope mine will see to such a to from the truth of them words, for even I to not believe I could not satisfy myself with having expressed half what I feel towards you & dear George, that I love you very very dearly is not a more truth & surely if I loved you before, what more I could do now? - I do think you perfectly understood me & do my different feelings, yet it is a very difficult task together to say more, mine with a George, how far if you to inform me that you love me, we can I doubt it is very very kind in you always as to me - I have not been your confidant in few even than I believe, but I do believe however, with how you may be that you do not say otherwise than you feel - You believe I am to be parted in some sense perhaps I may believe a little, but I do know how much I have to thank you for much of the misery that has befallen me - I know I have had thankless, cruel friends, but I have the satisfaction to feel that although I have never been able to trust them since that I never have done them in injury; At this time I do not mean in excuse for myself, for that me I am not blind to my faults, but I hope though I receive reproaches for past errors may yet meet with forgiveness & that I shall I believe understand how I trust would see the more lenient to them & instead of not admiring my fellow creatures - I am thoroughly aware of all that has been said of me, of the that I have deserved, but it is a letter (although I have seen one) more to be best than

Therefore it is to triffl with the Character of a young Woman: that was your, & it is easy to destroy it what can we better fear? I feel the same truth of this, & it is that conviction my Dear kind soul that makes me what you call diffident; and to God I had been more so if much misery I might have incas'd - I am I am fearful of many confidants & you are my own by the assurance you give me of approving of my caution in that kind - So I cannot say when the whole that what I wish is founded entirely on you, but I will candidly own to you that my spirit is so broken & I so often feel myself an unhappy that I do live when the hope that when my duty towards the best would have him even if I could that I may then retire from this worldly scene & end my days in quiet. I do fear a thought may be attached to them which my beloved Savage & your dear subject of my blame me for, but can I forget that you said related in two dear letters from you "that you feel for me & love me, better than our child" this draws me out to say more than probable Providence dictates, unfortunately in some sense I am capable of attachment & when we meet, or from what you express may be to this, I may be led to say more, the See is rather between us, & do not fear what you say, for if you love me as you say you do, why I fear? & dear Savage sometimes comes on when he says he will not speak, for believe me my heart is the warmly misapprehended with gratitude to take offence at any thing or any advice you may be kind for me - I shall send your kind letter over & over again, & wish you could see the comfort it has afforded me, I instantly destroyed it & hope you will then as soon or read - Pray say a thousand adieu to dear dear Savage & bid him from his dear friend
- Shall we really see Savage on Saturday - Pray, I hope this letter will not make him look Savage when we for I assure you I shall not fault when the kindness of your letter

Wednesday night -

The Angel has seen the Chamberlain & Cook etc, nothing is settled further, she seems in the same state, the A. said that the C. had seen the Q that the latter had received him privately & had said he was obliged to see him which seemed odd after all that we have heard, whether any thing has passed the Queen's I know not, but he said to the Queen that nothing should prevent his substituting her, that the Q had desired to have the appointments made out in her name which he (the A.) had refused as he was to be at the expense of the whole - had left her, she then has at the Queen's room & I will leave you an in for another hurricane -
