

My Darling Sir,

I think, that you will not be a little astonished, when you see my handwriting, at the same time that you will receive the parcel which accompanies it, & for which surprise I will now briefly account to you.
Dearest Mother, mentioned to me, the day before yesterday, that you were plained of being tormented to the greatest degree with phiblainis. I instantly sent off to our little friend Barnett at Brighton for his letter, I have this moment received it, & I instantly forward it, to Denbigh, in the fervent hope, that in a very few Hours, you will be entirely relieved, if not absolutely cured by this Application.

I need, <sup>not</sup> say, how much I have missed you, how much, & how long I have wished to see you, & how very very long there has been the uppermost desire & wish of my Heart, my dear Darling & c; & it is therefore, with a delightful & de-act words to express, that I announce to You, that on next Monday, You may with certainty rely upon the arrival of a Knight I want, who will suddenly arrive, seize upon You, & as suddenly convey You, to the old castle of Windsor, where, <sup>very</sup> you be sure, my beloved Child, you will be received with open arms, by its old Popper. All I can further add is, that I hope you will be able on Tuesday Morning, for I fear I shall hardly be able to visit entirely You all & quite up, on your arrival at the old

London, on Monday, I shall be so very very happy, & so very much delighted at seeing you again. I am so elated with this happy & delightful prospect, that I shall add no more at present, than that I am, through life, my Darling Pis,

ever & most truly affectionate

Wm. Pitt

Wm. Pitt
1824.

P.S. From Lewis et ses deux Petits, pro--sentent leurs hommages. From ce parti on ne peut pas mieux, mais bien que ses Papiers.
Do not my sweet child, forget to apply the lotion frequently, & to rub the affected Parts frequently, & to let it remain <sup>new</sup> wet for a considerable time, with a piece of linen wet with it.