Rich^d Gregory.

The Author of the inclos'd Letter to Mr Pitt, whom it is presumed he has address'd by his characteristic Title, humbly approaches to lay it at the Feet of his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales.

It will be introduc'd to the public Eye tomorrow, and the Writer flatters himself, that it conveys in firm but decent Language, wholesome Truths, which to be universally and willingly allow'd, need only be widely diffus'd, and generally known.

It may be considered as the voice of a faithful People looking up with the Fondness of Hope and the warm Wishes of Expectation to his Royal Highness, the Person alone proper, and alone able, like the Rising Sun, to dispell the dark Cloud which envelopes the Nation.

Should the Sentiments of the Letter, written on the Spur of the Occasion, and produc'd rather by the Emotions of a zealous Heart than any Pretensions to Superiority of Talent, should this early Offspring rather of strong Attachment than great Abilities, be so Fortunate as to meet with the Approbation of his Royal Highness, the Writer will ever consider the auspicious Effort as the Pride and Pleasure of his Life.

To open the Eyes of a Kingdom that has long been misled by an artful but dangerous Minister, to make a People sensible of the Blessings they have in Store, and to do away the false Prejudices of ministerial Insolence is what he has attempted, however he may have fail'd in the Execution.

He ventures to flatter himself, that however unskillful the Hand, he has touch'd the right String, and that every honest Heart in the Kingdom will vibrate in Unisson with it.

If in this or any other Exertion, the Author can serve a Prince the Delight and future Dependance of the Age, he will embrace with Pleasure every Opportunity of devoting his Pen or even his Life to a Cause, which so powerfully calls forth every fine Feeling of Honour, Generosity and Loyalty, according at the same Time with the true Principle of the Constitution, the real Glory and Prosperity of the British Empire.

Should his Royal Highness with a Spirit as manly as it is polite, excuse this Intrusion, and condescend to communicate any Commands, he will be pleas'd to order them to be ~~communicated~~ left
