

(Acc. 1059)

Private.

When the King had the pleasure of seeing Lord Bexley at Brighton, he quite escap'd Him, to mention a circumstance relative to his good old Servant M^r. Harper.

The late King, had been graciously pleas'd from his attachment to Him, to grant three hundred p^{r} . an^m. on the Duke, to M^r. Harper on his death. She, poor Woman is now dead, He has two Daughters, the King therefore desires, that this three hundred p^{r} . an^m., may be granted to these two Daughters, upon M^r. Harper's demise. The King feels assur'd that Lord Bexley will derive great satisfaction, from the happiness which this communi-

...ation, will give this worthy man.
