

— lives in a very handsome style — she is vulgar in her manners & appearance — has seen little of the world, feels herself raised by marriage with a man of his sense, &c. but makes him an excellent wife — is charitable & very friendly, & is so attached to me that I suppose there is nothing she would not do to serve me — I cannot however help regretting she has so little refinement — but one must be content to suffer something out of gratitude, for the pleasure of her Husband's society.

[Faint, illegible handwritten text, likely bleed-through from the reverse side of the page.]