London March 25th 1771.

Sir

The proper choice of a French teacher for the young Princes is perhaps as delicate a point as any that occurs in thinking of the executive instruments of Their Royal Highnesses Education; one has occurred to my mind with whom I am personally acquainted and of whose Character I have strong testimonies. His name is Salgar born a gentleman and in France; droove from his native country by religious persecution early in life, he was recommended to Mons<sup>r</sup> Boireel and has had the entire care of the education of both his sons every other particular relating to him that has come to my knowledge shall be laid before Your Majesty the first time I am admitted into your Royal presence I have the honour to be with the most profound respect

Sir

Your Majesty's
most loyal subject most dutifully devoted Servant
