I have the honor to acknowledge the favor of your Letter, and to express the sincere pleasure I feel at the hope of seeing His Royal Highness Prince Caspary in this country: I perceive however with regret that we are not likely, on account of the continuance of His Royal Highness's indisposition to be gratified with his visit until the Spring.

I shall expect His Royal Highness's further orders, and in the mean time I can venture to engage that His Royal Highness will be received by His Imperial Majesty with every mark of distinction and friendliness, which can be expected from the friendly sentiments which subsist between His Majesty and the Emperor of Russia, as well as from those amiable qualities by which His Royal Highness has endeared himself in every country which he has visited.

I beg to thank you with much thanks for the kind Royal Warrant of my most sincere devotion & of the zeal with which I shall endeavour to render his stay in this country as satisfactory as possible.

I have an apartment in my own house, in which I flatter myself I shall be able to accommodate his Royal Highness and his suite, and I can only say that the gratification which I should feel at being able to contribute personally to his Royal Highness's comfort, would infinitely overbalance every other consideration which his Royal Highness might in his goodness ever in opposition to my sincere wishes -

I wait his Royal Highness's further orders for every thing relating to his apartments &c. and without delay have the honor to remain
