My Dear Friend

I had not the good fortune to find the Chancellor at home, but I shall try to fix an interview with him.

Indeed, you have had better by your decision. I was with him this morning, & he was in good humor, tho' I could not gain upon him. I have an answer from Lord Grey, resting entirely upon his former objections. It is clear that they do not mean to accept any terms whatever. The only point to be determined is, whether one should take from them the last shadow of excuse which they might attempt in saying that I had made no overture to them; by which they to be considered as an expla-
