Dear Sir

I am sorry that I missed seeing you when you did me the honour to call. I write this at your own table; for I am most anxious to learn your determination on the notice which appears in the papers of this day.
I suspect the volume will be published on Saturday - and all the Journals on the King day will treat with extracts. If you agree with me in the prudence of giving the first impression, my notice must be written this evening; in which I should say that to prevent misrepresentation I would say the whole before the public without a comment.
Let me hear from you; I shall be in the stand.

Faithfully Yours
Jas Perry
