My dear Sir Bury<sup>n</sup>

I understand that Lord Hill, Lord Beverford, and myself are appointed to carry the Standards of England, Ireland and Scotland; and from Sir George Murray I learn, that these are to be of no inconsiderable weight.

I believe nobody else who has any thing to carry, are to walk without attendants, which seems peculiarly necessary in this case, because as the Standards are not to be carried into the Choir, it will be very awkward to commit them to the Custody of any Person, that is standing by at the time--

Under these circumstances I think His Majesty will see the propriety of our being allowed to appoint an Attendant--

If this takes place Sir George Hayton must of course have the instructions concerning the Dress and I for one shall name Lord Birmingham, who will be both useful and Ornamental.

Believe me

Sincerely

L. M. Wale
