Sir William

Not having the honor to be personally known by you, to whom I have been informed I ought to apply officially for the arrangement of a small claim (though to me important) that I have on His Majesty for a commission long ago executed, as far as I was allowed to proceed with it. I feel it necessary for your better understanding the nature of the claim, to trespass on your time, whilst I state a few circumstances immediately connected with it. I fear it will be difficult to do this without danger of offence, though as nothing could be further from my intention, so I trust it will not be ill taken in a quarter where if I were allowed, my highest respect and affection, would go hand in hand with my duty and obedience.

Soon after my production of the portrait of the late Dean of Christ Church,

I received his Royal Highness the Prince regent's commands, for a personal interview and introduction to him and his portrait painted, which appointment I had received some time before on the death of Mr. Hoppus.

I was most graciously received, and after his Royal Highness expressing his satisfaction at the appointment, he did me the honour to go through part of his collection: after having shown me his pictures, he said to me he had occasion for several portraits of himself, in different styles and sizes; some for public places, and others for particular friends; and desired me to consider myself engaged to execute them. This was very highly gratifying to me, and I expressed myself ready to begin, and forward the commissions, whenever his Royal Highness could give me the necessary sittings. Immediately after this Lady Dundas called on me to say that Sir David had received his Royal Highness's commands to sit to me for his portrait for him. This was done with success, and when Sir David and myself attended to present the picture, it was received with the most flattering expressions of approbation. His Royal Highness immediately pointed out a distinguished place for the picture, and superintended the hanging of it, speaking to all about him and to myself, in terms of the highest commendation, particularly to three of his Brothers, to whom he was pleased to mention me as the first portrait painter of the time. In the course of our long interview, the Regent said, "Sir David you must accept of my portrait by Owen, in return for yours," and turning to me, added, "and I have promised the same thing to eight or ten other persons; God knows when I shall find time to sit, but it must be done!" — I think it was in the autumn of 1812 that I was much gratified and delighted, by a letter from the Lord Chancellor, wherein he says, "I have just left the Prime Regent, who has promised me his portrait of your painting, and have moreover received his Royal Highness's commands, to keep reminding him of it till it is done."

Conceive Sir William, the great and anxious delight I then experienced at so fair and honorable addition to my reputation and fortune, and think what severe disappointment I have since felt, in finding such a promise, so conveyed, which I conceived to be sacred, and certain, still ineffectual, and amounting to nothing; though I have myself been ever attentive, and ready to perform my part of the work.

About this time I received commands for a large picture of the Regent, for the Castle at Dublin; many attendances at Carleton House followed, and as many disappointments, and apologies ensued, with reserved appointments for sittings, which however never took place. Exactly at the time of the Regent's visit to the Duke of Rutland, I understood that they were become impatient at the Castle of Dublin for the promised picture; and the Regent not having found time to sit, left his commands for me, with Col. MacMahon and Genl. Turner, that I should make for him as fast as possible, a copy of the whole length portrait of his Royal Highness by Wofford, with the intention of sending it to Ireland. This was commenced immediately, and in order to accelerate the work and sweet the wishes of his Royal Highness, I paid sixty guineas to an assistant to forward for me a preparation of the copy.

 Before this could be quite completed, the original picture belonging to one of the state rooms, was obliged to be replaced for some particular occasions. Before there was an opportunity of having it again, the Duke of Dorset accompanied by Col. MacMahon, and Mr. Peake, the then Secretary, came to see what was in preparation for the Castle, and expressed so much disappointment at having that picture chosen for them instead of an original portrait, that the progress of the copy was suspended, and it still remains with me unpaid for.

When the King visited Oxford, he promised two pictures of himself, one to the University, and another for the Hall at Christ Church; which latter it was generally understood, and several members of the College have told me, that his Royal Highness had expressly said, should be of my painting: he also told Sir Jackson, that his friend Mr Owen, was to paint him for Christ Church. In the late season of splendid exaltation, which I have felt perhaps too much in contrast with my own painful condition and gloomy prospects, I cannot help feeling it somewhat uncon-sonable, that his Majesty's rightful and happy accession, to the highest point of his elevation, should be the cause of a degradation to me, which however is the fact: your Sir William will smile at the assertion, but the loss of a fairly earned distinction, is of importance to a professional man like myself; and I have now not the sight of calling myself portrait painter to the King, though long acknowledged in that station, by the Prince of Wales, and Regent. This, though a feather

I cannot well afford to lose, is yet in my present condition, not a first rate subject. I do not see William, presume to express an opinion on his Majesty's using his pleasure of whom he should sit to for his portrait, but cannot help thinking some consideration due to the promises and engagements, formerly made to myself, and the very natural disappointment at their failure, and this consideration I might hope for, from the King's known goodness, and kindness of heart, could I be fortunate enough to obtain a proper representation of my case, aggravated as it is by the severe suffering of four years painful illness, which has for a great part of the time, totally suspended my professional operations; and though not yet quite without hope of recovery, I have in addition to present difficulties, the gloomy prospect of a tedious and protracted restoration. You will Assure Sir William, that what I call a claim for the immediate business part of my application to you, is a proportionate remuneration for the unfinished postscript I have described, which if completed would have been two hundred guineas —

For whatever else may come of the statement I have troubled you with, I must rely on the favor of your representation, and the well known beneficence of his Majesty.

I have the honor to be

your obedient and very humble servant

Dear Sir William

You have kindly expressed an interest in my favor, I hope I shall soon prove myself unworthy that interest, I know that I shall not feel ungrateful, I could wish to submit to you because a few circumstances connected with my professional movements hitherto -

It was in the year 1796 that I had the honor to be appointed Printer and Engraver in Messrs. Smiths to His Majesty down Prince of Wales, as an Engraver I wish no longer to be received but as my apology for not having produced better and more pictures. The reputation I had acquired in that profession rendered it necessary to make a great sacrifice & give it entirely up - but my struggle was to prove myself capable of embracing the art of Printing, and that art in all its branches,

As a Printer, I had the honor to be introduced to His Majesty George the Third by the late Lord Comersville with your large Landscapes, and at the same time to the Queen and some of the Princess's as an Emprador, When I had the honor to present my Emprading of the Review after His William Bouches future,

As an Emprador, I have given to the British Museum a set of my works on the paper in see their varied states during the progress of finishing to the amount of your hundred impressions -

As a Painter, I have now in my possession Studies which I have made from Nature & connected with allegory, History, Portraits Landscape, Animals & Domestic Subjects, amounting to five thousand,

My success in the Lithographic art the King has been graciously pleased to signify His Royal approbation of Should I have the honor of my name was again being submitted to His Majesty's most gracious and condescending consideration I could wish it were imposed upon the King, that what was now acquirement I have endeavoured to possess myself of in the circle of art, it has never been by the neglect of, or at the expense of any power I might hold in my former pursuits, each of which I have found to be strengthened by every fresh acquisition.

In a few days I shall have it in my power to offer for your acceptance a pleasing fact of an allegorical Group, as a specimen of my modelling, in which art I at times employ myself, considering that an occasional exercise in that Department essential to the constituting an eminent Painter.

While led by my employers to the various objects in art and Nature, I have invariably thirsted after the highest class - it was therefore when engaged in painting my large picture of the Waterloo Allegory, that I appeared to be in my Element, and completely at home, and I am well assured, that it is not possible for any person (if he possesses judgment) to form any conception of what my capacity is as a Painter, until seeing that extensive and laborious undertaking now can they form any adequate idea of its nature and tendency before giving it its full explanation a sufficient consideration.

and which cannot be expected until the intended Engraving is completed I cannot but acknowledge a pleasurable sensation in the full assurance that the Sentiments contained in that allegory (being founded in Truth) would incorporate my Name with the Battle of Waterloo, with the illustrious Wellington, with our August Monarch - the dignified character of our Country the excellence of our Laws, the triumph of Religion and the virtues over the deceit and bad Passions of Men I will not now trouble you with further particulars, but am confident that the time is not far distant when every British Subject will feel the full force of the Sentiments contained in that allegory (as could he was second) would the Great Personage whose powerful and active Mind was at the main Spring which gave impetus to the whole operative Power which so happily terminat'd in a conquest which of all others since the Destruction of Jerusalem terminated with the most extraordinary and most happy results, we are now but in the beginning of its beneficial consequences, they will yearly increase. But it is for future generations fully to embrace the plenitude of advantages to be derived from it. All nations at a future day will feel the concentrated effects and behold with admiration the Battle of Waterloo, as the happy Principle upon the commemorative Edifice of stupendous Events. -

I am now about to procure the Portrait of Bonaparte charged before he leaves London again - The Horse is in Secret & not to be known.

after that I shall be anxious to get that of His Majesty. I wish to know the Name of that Horse, and also if I should find it at Windsor, or in the Stables of Carlton Palace -

His Majesty in His great kindness and condescension, mentioned the accompanying parts of the Saddle & c

I should desire much after procuring the portraits, to make a subject with those accompanying me.

What a subject might be made with the King upon him, but then I do not allow myself to think of, certainly dare not take the liberty to suggest -

I have the honor to be,
Dear Sir William,
with great respect yours much obliged and most devoted servant not resist the impulse by which I was impelled to request permission to show to His Majesty two cabinet pictures which were at my house before. The manner in which this liberty was received by the King was to me at the voice of an angel, it was followed by His Majesty directing my attention to some of the most beautiful horses, and some of which I was led to suppose it would be pleasing to His Majesty to see painted, and afterwards upon Mr. Wyatt assisting me the King observed "go into the stable and see what a beautiful picture Mr. Ward is painting for me" and thus was most graciously pleased to lift me to the exalted situation of being employed by the greatest Monarch upon the earth -

After this flattering and glowing interview the King went to London, and it became a subject of consideration whether I should remain until His Majesty's return, my opinion was that I was placed upon a spot of sacred duty, honor, and happiness, and that I should not stir. Royalty appeared to take an interest in what I was doing, and all that was left in my feeble power, by which I could express my deep sense of gratitude was to exercise my Pencil to the utmost extent of my ability for His Majesty's amusement, as I would deild the Wood for the Kings Gratification had Providence placed me in the army or Navy, with these impressions it became an object of concern how I might be enabled to proceed with my work under His Majesty's condescending Eye, to finish a picture in the stable was impossible, the effluvia combined with the dust would affect the durability if not injure the present appearance of the picture. - at a loss in this particular I had recourse to Miss White (whose kind attentions I must ever remember) upon my asking that Lady if she could afford me advice or assistance in procuring a room of any kind where I might proceed with my picture, she thought it right for me to consult M<sup>r</sup>. Brant, and now made me acquainted with the circumstance (for the first time) of M<sup>r</sup>. Brant being the comptroller of His Majesty's Household, and Secy to the Marquis of Longingham, nothing would be more proper, and I requested an interview, - upon my introduction to M<sup>r</sup>. Brant, I found it my surprise a tremor of indignation & resentment at the bare suggestion of a room to paint in, I was made to feel my own nothingness, and shrank back in dismay at my presumption, was constrained to offer my apology, & said I had not done wrong in asking to see him that I came to consult him and ask his advice and instruction, and not to suggest what might or might not be proper, that I could not think of Cumberland Lodge, but ~~either~~ a room in any one of the buildings connected with the stables, my only anxiety being that as His Majesty appeared to take an interest in the progress of my picture, and might be pleased to honor me again with His Royal Presence, I might be found in such a situation as He might approve. Mr. Brand observed that he had nothing to do with any other buildings but Cumberland Lodge the others were out of his department. After this interview I could not but approach Cumberland Lodge with feelings of trepidation, notwithstanding the King had placed me there, and that my reflections pointed to the circumstance of Sir Thomas Lawrence engaged professionally in Buckingham House, Mr. Holloway at Hampton Court, Sir Will<sup>m</sup> Beechey and the late Mr. West in Windsor palace, with several other artists, while with the old Architects nothing was more common than for them to be professionally employed under the Roof & the Eye of Royalty.

I was humbled, ~~and I felt~~ my next consideration was to get my pictures completed with as much expedition as possibility could be obtained to, at home, concluding that nothing would be more agreeable to the wishes of the King, especially His Majesty having enquired after Boothroyd & Chiville which pictures I wished to retouch & improve.

His Majesty now did me the honour in His Most gracious condescension to visit the stables a second time, and was pleased to manifest Himself to me with this time in a manner still more kindly and more inducing by amiable than upon the first interview, and in this visit I had still reason to conclude that His Majesty would take an interest in observing occasionally the progress of my works, I wished to be able to ascertain the fact,

So suddenly to withdraw the Rayo by which I have been empowered, I bow and retire in dutiful thankfulness and humble resignation - but shall nevertheless continue still endeavouring to deserve it,

With every feeling of Respect

Esteem & Gratitude

Yours obliged & devoted

Servant

James Ward

As. Perhaps it would not be right to leave out the following particulars from your knowledge,

When the King did me the honor to look at the two cabinet pictures, His Majesty was most graciously pleased (among other enlivening observations) to say that He wished they were His; of course I made this known to Sir Charles Blount & Mr. Almon whose they are, those Gentlemen with every feeling of loyal attachment declined parting with them, it remained therefore only for me to hope it might be in my power to produce others which would equally interest His Majesty.

I wished also in humble duty and with delightful anticipation to have submitted to His Majesty's consideration my plan of future operations, which were as follows. —

To carry on the Lithographic work of Horses to every distinct breed and character beginning with all the varieties which might compose the Royal collection, and in the humble hope that His Majesty might be graciously pleased to point out the individual Horses as most characteristic of each class — and also if He would be pleased to give His opinion and assent to the composition & grouping, or the individual arrangement of each, and which it was my intention to make sketches of slightly in watercolours, one or two of which I had already collected in my Sketch Books as Specimens —
