Sir,

The Bishop of Mevri at Rome wrote to me a letter which I receiv'd yesterday, announcing a Legacy left to me by The Cardinal of York, who was so good when I was at Rome to pay me and my Family in common attention - & so Condescending to declare I was born His relation by my Mother!

The Bishop sent to me at The same time, The Letter I have now The Honour to inclose to your Royal Highness, which he requested I would deliver into your own Hands, which I hope will be my excuse for The liberty I take in transmitting it in this manner, being necessarily absent from London on account of my health and only just arriv'd here with Mrs Courtts & Lady Guilford & her Children.

I am Sir, with the truest & most Dutiful respect Your Royal Highness's most Faithful and devoted & humble servant

Thomas Courtts.

Espinal Vol. I No 438

Dear Sir

your very flattering note, and acceptable present of Genl. Stewarts print which is the finest thing I ever beheld and the strongest likeness, reached me this moment, and I thank you for both. — your note gives me much satisfaction — I had for some time been thinking of intruding a few words on your time, which words have remaind unsaid, from my shyness of appearing presumptuous enough to suggest any thing to one whose genius and conceptions are so splendid.

— but now that you have re-assured my timidity, I will confess, that I should feel deeply sorry if such an occasion was lost in handing down to posterity, by such a pencil as yours, the noblest events that the History of the world has to produce — no man possesses more Taste or finer Ideas on an exalted scale than the Regent, and I make no doubt that he will propose to you what will meet yours.

— I have as little doubt that from the moment you had reason to think the plan was in agitation, that you would give up your thoughts to the Subject, and to the inspirations which can alone give energy to such works, but altho a far better Idea may already have been suggested than any which has shined across my fancy, yet its visions shall be laid before you, as in the multitude some little matter may present itself to be adopted.

In the first place it strikes me that one painting cannot properly contain our Subject ~~without~~ two paintings of very considerable size, not inferior to that of West lately finished, and be necessary, and companions to each other.

In the present day of wonders, is there any scene that you know of, that could tell the tale more distinctly, or comprehend Fact — feeling — and character, more favourably to an Historical painting than that, where the King of France taking from his Shoulders the order of the St Spirit, threw it over the neck of the Regent. — saying

"To you Sir I have owed my All! — even my Subsistence — I have nothing to give but This — keep it to remind you of Louis the 18th"

These strong, ingenious, simple words, deserve I think to be engraved on the back of the painting, which would descend to future ages, the Testimony of the Gratitude of a King of France, restored to his Throne by the Firmness and liberality of an English monarch (& no bad record of the virtues of this country who know not what national Enmity is when misfortune connecty itself with her youth & past misfortunes would add interest & charm to the groupe, and the great Heads of administration most of whom were present at this affecting scene and who have aided the glorious cause deserve to be commemorated by your pencil also

With respect to the other painting, you know better than I do, that the two Emperors, the King of Prussia & some of the greatest Generals the world can boast are likely to be here soon to see our Regent and to visit this Country — what a noble Assemblage on such an occasion for your Imagination to groupe! and in some befitting manner I think you could obtain permission to introduce the figure of the Princess Charlotte to give the addition of female softness & beauty to this collection of Heroes, forming a counterpart or rather companion to the other painting — one Stipulation I must make with you, and no hint — I have two excellent precedents for what I propose ... Sir Joshua Reynolds in the window at Oxford, where he represents himself as one of the shepherds; — and Titian in a picture of our Lords Supper, belonging to my brother Lord Bateman. — after having painted the Emperor Charlemain & all the monarchs of his own time as Apostles at the table of our Saviour, he introduces himself as one of the attendants, bringing in a most excellent pye — Let me therefore see Mr Lawrence introduced in some character into those national paintings — you will deserve your place.

I hope to see the Regent shortly, tho I know not when — I have been ill, but I am now quite recovered. — the moment is close at hand when the last mentioned painting should be thought of. — if the present opportunity is lost, its strength & force from collecting the countenances as they now are, will be lost to you for ever. — I feel most zealous in the matter but from respect to the Regent have been silent to every human creature, one person excepted, of rank & of taste take in it. — and I shall from reasons that are but just to you be equally silent on the letter I am now writing to you. — I hope a little time will see my wishes in train to be accomplished, mean while from my silence I have no Allys to fight this cause ^{along} with one ~~which~~ ~~might~~ from laying all your thoughts before his Royal Highness as they arise — I look on it as a duty you owe to the Regent & to your Country, even more than to yourself, and if you neglect it now, you will repent it when the time is past — believe me with much Esteem, your sincerely Anne Barnard

My Dear Sir,

In the confidence of your considerate policy and the strong impression of your friendliness of conduct towards me, I venture (after long intervals of doubt and apprehension) to send to you the enclosed letter; the subject of which is too interesting to an artist (emulous undoubtedly of every other distinction in his profession), to justify so long a silence, but from motives of propriety and that dread of being thought obtrusive and presumptuous, which ought generally to govern him in his professional conduct, but which there is still more binding on him from the distance of his situation, and his just and sincere feeling of Reverence and Duty. — The near approach however of these illustrious Strangers, and the consideration that a moment may gain or lose the highest Object that a Life of Exaction could possibly attain in painting a Subject of such a Nature, as the simplest Patron of ^{either of} these Monarchs whose cooperation with the Regent's views appears to have secured the Happiness of Europe. — The greatest Honour that I have ever received after the gracious notice of His Majesty, is the having my Picture of Lord Newlow placed in His Royal Highness's collection; and so placed as to fill me with the kindest gratitude for such generous Distinction: but I am not justified in believing that another Poem recently printed by me is to have the same Distinction. There indeed should be reward, sufficient for all reasonable Ambition - but extraordinary Events produce unusual Feelings; and it is hardly possible that such a Thought presented to the Mind as is presented by the enclosed Poem, can leave it in Repose.

2

To you Sir however I submit the whole - You will pass over the uncorrected expressions which the courtesy of this Lady has bestowed on my supposed qualifications for Taylor to address and not consider me deficient in knowledge of myself, for not withholding such a letter, those compliments are in it.

My Dear Sir,

You cannot escape additional trouble from me even at this distance - Had you opportunity to speak to the Prince Regent for his permission to let these pictures be engraved? All who see them express desire that they should, ~~and~~ and I am naturally anxious to extend my professional reputation by good Prints from these Works, which I consider as my best.

It would be dishonourable in me to conceal that they would be a source of ^{considerable} Profit either to me, or to a Publisher; and as I know will think that of emolument is to be gained from such a gratification to the Publisher, the Original Artist may justly share in it.

Application has been made to me respecting them, particularly for this Portrait of Lord Wellington which is now very greatly improved, and I may fairly say admir'd, and as the Plate would be executed by the first Engraver, and he under my immediate direction, I should close with the offer, did, know myself justified in doing it by His Royal Highness's sanction and permission. — The Point would be dedicated to him, and the distinction he mentioned of Lord W's sitting to me at H. H. the Desire. M^r Bourge is the Applicant, who says he had the Prince Regent's permission to dedicate a Print of Lord Wellington to him, 'tis from what picture he had not then determined.

In the case of Blakes and Count Potoff, the Publisher should be, a very worthy Man, Mr Colnaghi of Coopers Street; if His Royal Highness and ~~myself~~ had no objection.

I am more and more apart of my success in the Prince Regent's Portrait about which there has been no dissentient voice. This Morning Lady Sainsford and her ^{Friends} came to see it, and valued it equally with the rest of my Pictures. I am obeying the Royal Highness's wishes in proceeding with a copy.

of it which will be completed

My Dear Sir, and Friend!

I have but to give new thanks for new obligation, and attention the more kind, from its breaking in upon many important business which even in your retirement must press on your mind, & renew health permits you to turn to them. — I did not hear of your illness till it was ^{as rather known as fact} contradicted, and therefore

My sincere sorrow for it was unattended with the apprehension I must otherwise have felt, in common with those many who (except from thankfulness) have more desire to express their solicitude to Mrs McMahon, to whom I should then have addressed my letter - If you would give me one line with this only "I am still better" - it would very much oblige me.
Lord Stewart comes home today - the 10th is greatly your Debtor for having gratified his laudable Ambition, by procuring from the Prince his consent to have his Portrait at Vienna which (tho' a minor point, if at all felt by him) will doubtless add to his Reception there.

Might I venture to say "dedicated by permission to His Royal Highness the Prince Regent" This question is not however to have you into ^{the shortest} a letter unless moments of perfect health & leisure make it entirely convenient to you. I beg may
