Sir

Just as I was setting out from London yesterday, Lord Thurlow called & showed to me His Majesty's answer. As Lord Thurlow said that he should immediately write to your Royal Highness, & with your permission wait upon you, I did not think it necessary either to write or to stop my journey.

The Duke of York being here, I conceived it right to mention the result to him.

Ld.

He was much distressed at it; and expressed himself with the most affectionate regards towards Your Royal Highness. Expecting to meet you according to appointment in Town on Wednesday, he entreats that you will not make any final engagements till he shall have conversed with you. The more I consider the business the more I am satisfied, that, by the firmness & regularity with which Your Royal Highness will prosecute your plan, more ultimate advantage will accrue to your Royal Highness, than could have flowed from a more previous determination on the part of the King.

I have the Honor to be Sir, with profound respect

Your Royal Highness's most faithful & obliged servant
