Westwick Street.
Saturday Evening.
April. 16. 1796.
5. o'clock.

Sir,

I have just received the inclosed Masterly Composition from L^d. Thurlow, and as he presses me much to return it him early to morrow morning, perhaps Your Royal Highness will have the Goodness to permit the Footman to bring it back.

The Part of it I am persuaded will strike your Royal Highness, but as the whole tells so much and so forcibly for the Interests of your Royal Highness, your wonted good Nature will imagine it not there. The Author I believe in his Life never composed without an Innuendo.

I received a long Dispatch from the same Quarter yesterday, and have the great Satisfaction of acquainting your Royal Highness that it is the Opinion of L.^d J. the Balance in Mr. Court's hands must be subject to your Drafts.

Nothing but feeling myself too unwell, should have prevented me from meeting your Royal Highness last night at Mrs. Vanneck's, a pleasure felt by no one more sensibly than I.

Sir,

Your Very faithful Servant,

Thos. Tyrerhill
