Dublin 18th July

I took my hat yesterday. It had been intimated to me that a violent attack would be made on me for my having introduced the affairs of this Country in the English House. I wished that they who had so silly a plan should bear the full weight of it: therefore, in giving notice of my Motion for Monday, I would not say any thing which might serve as an excuse for introducing the subject. It would have been a most absurdity.

for any of them to have fallen into: but every one was quiet. Indeed, I was received with very complimentary appearance. There not having been opportunity for talking in the House, Mr. Dillan requested thro' Mr. Bellamy that he might call upon me this day. He has done so, and he has professed in the most satisfactory manner that he never used the words or expressed the sentiment ascribed to him by the newspaper. Faithfully yours M.
