

M. Tyrwhitt to HRH

Tyrwhitt

39751

Sir,

Griff desired me to attend him home: the instant he entered the library, "I see his "Haynes's" hand writing - let us see" - after having read not through the first page entirely, he exclaimed, "a damned deal too much reasoning
"to deliberate upon at the instant, He shall keep "for my cabinet by & by" & put the letter in his pocket - The conversation short as it was was interesting, as he seemed to doubt on which side the popularity or unpopularity of the two bills, lay - with the letter of your Royal Highness's lay another, written in a disguised hand, & anonymous, but recommending him in the strongest manner possible to have an audience of the King - the letter began, "If I forget him, may God forget me!" He dared however to think the King would be displeas'd with him, should he venture to intrude upon him - He complain'd of being very unwell, & low.

I am,

Sir,

Your very faithful servant

Thos: Pymhill.

Carlton House
3 o'clock.