

Ed. Hoora to Col. McKeahon

Shangate, Sep 10^{2/13}, 1883.

My Dear Charles

I received your letter this morning, and I dispatch this as a Parcel since there is no Post today, that you may not remain in any measure about the & London. Their letter must have been written in the morning. Before the check your check would be taken out of their hands. You have only to write a line to them to say that you had arranged to have the check taken up, which was of course effected before that time.

Can you get any body to hint to Charles Pemberton

Stewart / of the Life Guards / that the Charger which he has sold to me is lame: had not accidentally so, but from defect of long standing which may be palliated for a moment but never cured. By George St Charles Stewart, when he delivered the Horse, that it was lame. It continued so, & a very few miles of the journey either showed the complaint in its full extent. It is the most restive brute imaginable. Neither that, however, or objection on the score of its figure, make, & horri--ciousness of strength, could have been urged against it which that I considered as a bargain concluded. The contract, of course, implied that it was to be a bond of honor. It certainly was not so, tho' I have not the vaguest conception that General Stewart had a suspicion of the horse's malady. Indeed, I only want the hint to be given to him from the knowledge that he would be anxious to repair the mistake. If you spoke to Dr. Harington, or if entirely for yourself, attributing the error to Stewart's ignorance in his not apprising his Master of the horse's condition it will probably set matters to right: otherwise

I shall never have a ride, even in Boston New for my two Hundred Pounds.

Given by your friend. Love faithfully to

Prima

Charles M. Johnson.

Love the Prima to offer to the Princess to pur-chase the Horse at Newgate for her, she can probably if that I hear of decline it. She has re-sisted it, they say, as a punishment. The attention -wants tell well.
