The inclosed list which I beg leave to transmitt to your Majesty, will shew the names of those that Voted on one Side, in the two Questions of yesterday, but it is not in all particulars perfectly exact, I thought it adviseable to day to defer the Consideration of the Question relating to privilege till Friday, which was well receivd by the House. After that the Report of your Majesty's speech & the motion for the Address in consequence of it, was made very well by Lord Carraroon & with great approbation & Propriety by L^d Frederick Campbell, Mr Bedford made angry observations but proposed no amendments. Lord North, Mr Staley, & Mr Rice answered them very fully; after this Mr Pitt spoke for near two hours but found no fault either with the speech or address. His manner was extremely temperate, & very Parliamentary, tho he went thro' the whole system of public business both at home & abroad, & particularly recommended union upon Revolution Principles. I spoke in answer to him, & Mr Beckford, & endeavoured to go fully into the topics they had dwelt upon. Mr Huske the Member for Maldon spoke after me upon American business, & this closed the Debate.

The Question for the Address was put, & carried Demine Contradictente, which I most humbly
